Posi TV

Directed by Patrick Scully

Who knew chilly Minneapolis was a cauldron of AIDS culture? Patrick Scully and his band of merry men have produced a how-to video for newly diagnosed gay guys that hits the mark with a sense of humor and humility. Be warned, a painfully staged drag sequence and a stiff Mr. International Leather 1997 get things off to a bumpy start, but this "not quite an hour" film is soon flying with skits, monologues and eavesdropping on private chats. What's most compelling about the conversations is their authenticity. The four men are truly interested in one another's tales of love, pills and the side effects of both. —KO
